Job Description

At Frost & Sullivan, we seek people who will do more than just analysis. You will play a significant role understanding client's business issues, challenges and aspirations. We believe that your ability to deliver solutions to clients problems will depend more on your talent, skills and real life business experience than just your degree.

We are keen to employ people who care enough about a clients business problem, work hard to understand the underlying issues and accord priority to finding solutions to solve the problems. Here, your contributions will be as much important as our thought leadership and experience supporting clients. In solving business problems there are many unknowns. We are seeking people who can see a way through unfamiliarity, make sense out of limited information and draw insights from ambiguity. This quality will be critical to drum up critical support – both internal and external – to push ideas, plans and recommendations.

Core Responsibilities will include, but not be limited to the following:

- Conduct primary and secondary research, especially web based research on a variety of sectors
- Interact with clients to understand their needs and provide inputs to the business development process.
- To be able to translate information/data collected into meaningful analysis accurately and timely.
- Perform data validation, data cleansing, data profiling and analyze results and conduct quantitative and qualitative analysis.
- Help in preparing various pitch documents, reports, marketing collaterals etc.
- Interact with clients to understand their needs and provide inputs to the business development process.

- Keep abreast with the policies, past public interest projects, and with the new developments in the concerned area of study.

This is a full time position!
